
Notes on the Authors

David Atchoarena is Director of the Division for Education Strategies and Capacity Building at UNESCO. He previously worked at UNESCO's International Institute for Educational Planning. Before joining UNESCO/IIEP, he was Chargé de Mission at the National Agency for Lifelong Education of the French Ministry of Education and Project Coordinator in St Lucia's Ministry of Finance and Planning. He holds a doctorate from the University of Paris I. His work covers various areas, including educational planning, lifelong learning, education in small island developing states, technical and vocational education and training, and education and rural development.

Mark Bray is Chair Professor of Comparative Education at the University of Hong Kong, where he has worked since 1986. Between 2006 and 2010 he took leave from the university to work as Director of UNESCO/IIEP in Paris. He has widespread professional experience in small states and has worked closely with the Commonwealth Secretariat on this theme. He has published extensively on research methods in comparative education, and on the administration and financing of education with special reference to small states. Contact: Comparative Education Research Centre, Faculty of Education, University of Hong Kong, Pokfulam Road, Hong Kong. mbray@hku.hk.

Mindy Colin is a doctoral researcher in the Research Centre for International and Comparative Studies at the University of Bristol Graduate School of Education, UK. She has professional experience in higher education and ICT in small states, and is working on action research, curriculum and pedagogic reform, and holistic schooling for poverty reduction, with particular reference to Mauritius.

Michael Crossley is Professor of Comparative and International Education, Director of the Research Centre for International and Comparative Studies at the Graduate School of Education and Director of the Education in Small States Research Group (www.smallstates.net), University of Bristol, UK. He was editor of the journal Comparative Education from 2004 to 2010, and Chair and Vice Chair of the British Association for International and Comparative Education (BAICE), 2000–2004. He has undertaken teaching, research and consultancy work in numerous small states worldwide, led the present research and is the author (with Keith Holmes) of Educational Development in the Small States of the Commonwealth: Retrospect and Prospect, published by the Commonwealth Secretariat in 1999. Before moving to the University of Bristol, he was Associate Dean for Planning and Research at the University of Papua New Guinea. In 2005 he was elected as an Academician by the UK Academy for the Social Sciences (AcSS). Contact: Graduate School of Education, University of Bristol, 35 Berkeley Square, Bristol BS8 1JA, UK. m.crossley@bris.ac.uk.

Michaela Martin is a programme specialist at UNESCO/IIEP. In recent years, her work has focused on external quality assurance in higher education. This has included management of a distance course for planners in ministries of education and comparable bodies in small states. She took the lead role in a 2009 policy forum on tertiary education in small states organised by IIEP .

Steve Packer is an independent consultant based in London. From 2002 to 2005, he was Deputy Director of UNESCO's Education for All Global Monitoring Report. Prior to that, he worked for the UK Department for International Development as a Senior Education Adviser in Central Africa and then as Head of Policy in the Education Department. While at the Commonwealth Secretariat (1987–93), he initiated the Secretariat's programme of work on education in small states, and co-authored with Mark Bray a major book on this theme, Education in Small States: Concepts, Challenges and Strategies (Pergamon Press, 1993). Contact: 43 South Park Hill Road, South Croydon, Surrey CR2 7DZ, United Kingdom. stevepacker@blueyonder.co.uk.

Terra Sprague is a Research Fellow in the Research Centre for International and Comparative Studies at the University of Bristol Graduate School of Education, UK. She has professional experience in teacher training, special education and teaching English as a foreign language in the small state of Armenia and is working on the impact of standardised examination systems upon the cultural traditions of small states.